Harry E. Cartland

Harry Cartland is an independent technical consultant and entrepreneur in such areas as defense, space launch, and renewable energy. Cartland was a member of the technical staff of the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL), where he was a special projects leader for a number of defense and advanced technology projects from 1993 to 2001. After his time at LLNL, Cartland served as a professional staff member with the House Armed Services Committee, from 2001 to 2004 and 2005 to 2007. He led a special oversight team for then-Chairman Duncan Hunter, was staff director of the Projection Forces subcommittee, and served as the Committee's first staff director of the Strategic Forces subcommittee, which provides oversight of the atomic energy defense activities of the Department of Energy and strategic defense programs of the Department of Defense. Cartland previously served as an officer in the U.S. Army with a nuclear, biological and chemical defense specialty, and was a member of the United States Military Academy faculty.
